

Morning Comments February 19, 2009

DJIA closed just 3 points ahead of the level necessary for a Dow Theory reconfirmation of the primary bear trend. While we do not ever practice such precision having always chosen the spirit of the market when making our forecasts, many adhere strictly to the definitional interpretations. I guess those that follow Dow Theory are still in the game neutral awaiting additional proof to take action. What I see is a market that goes down on heavier volume than it goes up on and that is for the most part going down. That's a bear trend.

SHCOMP hit the wall just in front of our target and looks to begin a consolidation phase. We prefer this and most Asian markets longs in relative terms and a few in absolute terms. When the SPX trades nearer our downside targets we will be looking for reasons to get increasingly bullish in Asia.

YTD spot gold and the dollar are trading with the same sign (not Aquarius) a positive relationship here is building, I wonder how long that can last?
