

Morning Comments February 3, 2009

Big European market index prices are compressing. Following recent lower highs the DAX CAC and UKX are attempting to stabilize at higher lows now to really frustrate and confuse the maximum number of participants. Oscillator work here is a high wire act as well and can break either way. We suspect the pain trade may be up here for a day or 3 but that's more feel than fact as market participants play for the break down. Either way the dominant trend is down but don't be surprised by a test. This will try to bleed into SPX action today following yesterdays hold of the ~815 level.

Continued rotational activity out of defensive names saw money flow to tech and Nasdaq generally building on last weeks rotational action and we think this is a young trend attempting to exert itself regardless of market direction and we will continue to monitor this.

Mexican Peso is quietly breaking down along with a number of tertiary currencies and traders should keep an eye on this as markets pause.

SHCOMP hasn't given us much to write about for the last couple months as prices consolidated and action was mute. We have been bullish on this market for quite a while now with little to show for it but that may be turning. Last night saw prices rising on heavy volume and prices continue to close well above nearby MAs. We like CAF long now working around as SHCOMP closes above 10dMA, watch HangSeng closely as it tests its 10dMA from below to gauge risk. Stops can be set under ~1950 level.

The results presented should not and cannot be viewed as an indicator of future performance.
